Everybody's Husband

Everybody's Son

will be glad to know that at last Trenton has a Ready-Made Clothing Establishment, conducted as, and comparing favorably with the most famous houses of the larger cities, and we will tell you how it came about.

For nearly twenty years, Richard A. Donnelly has been located in the Taylor Opera House, doing a thriving business in Men's Furnishing Goods, and from time to time has noticed a large portion of the people going to Philadelphia to buy their clothing, because they could not see a larger and varied stock nearer by, and that if they were pleased in a garment, the price would be much higher than they knew similar goods could be sold for.

Long ago would he have extended his business and given Trenton what he has now given it, but no suitable store could be found.

But when the old store adjoining his place of business was pulled down, and new ones built in their stead, he saw that the time had arrived, and immediately leased the new one nearest him.

Into it his extensive Men's Furnishing Goods business was transferred, and soon his old quarters, the handsomest store in the city, was being stocked with everything that was desirable in clothing. The spacious room (35x85 feet) is filled with clothing, from the lowest priced to the finest broadcloth, every style of goods is there, and each of the four Departments is complete.

There are the Men's, Youth's, Boys' and Small Children's Departments, and the assortment in each and the low prices will surprise you.

Come near forgetting to tell you about the Overcoats, they are—but you must see them to appreciate them.

His old and well-known manner of conducting business will be followed, and of course everything will be marked in plain figures, and one price, and that a low one, will prevail.

In starting a new business on such an extensive scale, it was necessary to associate with him some one who was thoroughly posted on its "Ins and Outs," and his new partner is a gentleman from New York who has been with one of the largest of the Broadway Clothing Houses for a long time. Mr. Reineman is his name.

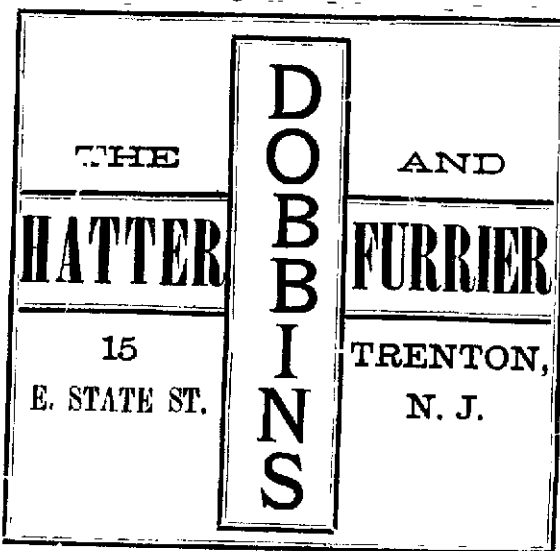

We thank you for having read all this, and extend a cordial invitation to have you call and see us when you are in Trenton. And as a special inducement, will present you with the handsomest thing in the advertising line that we ever saw, and we have seen a good many.

"NEW YORK STORE."

Prepared specially for the Bucks County Gazette.
SCIENTIFIC MISCELLANY.

From experiments made with various disinfecting substances upon vaccine virus, Dr. G. M. Sternberg, U. S. A. Surgeon, has concluded that chlorine, sulphurous acid and nitrous acid are reliable disinfectants in the proportion of one volume to one hundred volumes of air. In a moist atmosphere a considerably smaller proportion might be effective. He considers the use of carbolic acid as a disinfectant to be impracticable on account of the high cost of the pure acid and the large quantity necessary to ensure thorough results.

An English clergyman, Rev. W. Houghton, has made a study of the stomachs of sea-fishes with a view of learning the relations which exist between the food of the various species and the quality of their flesh, as well as the bearing of their food-supplies upon distribution and migration. His investigations have thus far been chiefly confined to North Sea fishes. He finds that whitebait and mackerel live largely upon small crustaceans, and believes that the rich quality of the herrings flesh is due to the same nutritious food.

The soy bean (Glycine hispida) approaches more nearly to animal food in its proximate composition than any other known vegetable production, being singularly rich in fat and in albuminoids. This bean forms an important article of food in Japan and China, where a dozen or more varieties are known. Of late it has attracted considerable attention in Europe, and numerous attempts have been made to acclimatize it in several European countries, some of the experiments being reported tolerably successful.

At a meeting of the Association of Swiss Geographical Societies lately held in Geneva, Herr Rinkler advanced the opinion that forests may serve as a safeguard against hailstorms. In support of this theory he adduced a remarkable observation to the effect that hail was unknown in the valleys at the foot of the wood-covered Lindenberg mountains until two wide gaps were made in the forest about twenty years ago; hailstorms then became frequent, but ceased to appear after the open spaces were closed by a new lot of trees. As an explanation of the phenomenon, Herr Rinkler suggests that, as hail-clouds are saturated with positive electricity and trees conduct from the earth negative electricity, the meeting of the two currents develops sufficient heat to either prevent the formation of hailstones or to melt them in the clouds.

At the summit of the Riffel (3,500 feet high) Capt. Abney has found the spectrum of the sun to be the same as in London, but there is a vast diminution of light as well as of aqueous vapor. The quantity of alcohol and benzine in the atmosphere was found to be much greater at that altitude than at sea-level, which leads Capt. Abney to conclude that these substances come to us from space.

The fifteen years' research of the British Association's Committee on Underground Temperature shows, as the main result attained, that the temperature, on a wide average, increases downwards at the rate of one Fahrenheit degree for every sixty-four feet.

It has been demonstrated at Havre that the use of the telephone between ships in the harbor and the town is practicable even in rough weather.

With a new apparatus for ascertaining the velocity of railway trains, a train weighing 125 tons and traveling at a speed of forty-five miles an hour has been found to run a few feet more than five miles after steam had been shut off. The track was level and the day calm.

A study of old records has shown a Roman sanitary engineer that the malarial region now surrounding the city of Rome was once healthy and populous, and his investigations have convinced him that a restoration of the ancient system of deep draining would free these lands from their fever-lair.

The constant appearance of a minute quantity of copper in bread led a European chemist to make a careful examination of wheat, when in a million part of the grain he found nine and one-fourth parts of metallic copper. A somewhat larger proportion of the metal was found in oats.

A Belgian physicist, Mons. Melsens, proposes forming a cage of rods from buildings to ensure absolute safety from lightning. He has shown by light experiments that the most powerful discharges from a Leyden battery could not injure a living animal enclosed in a hollow sphere of metallic links.

Mr. W. B. Wicken says that the large wart-like glands on the head and back of the toad secrete a thick yellowish-white fluid of an exceedingly acid and offensive nature. If these glands are squeezed or handled roughly, the secretion is exuded through a number of pin-like pores in the surface of the glands. This fact is doubtless what gave the toad its reputation as a venomous reptile.

One of the local industries of Southern California is the traffic in tarantulas and their nests. So great has been the demand for them on the part of relic-hunters and entomologists that a large number of persons are engaged collecting them. The tarantula, when caught, is injected with a preparation of arsenic, which serves to counteract its poison and preserves it from decay. Leo Fleishman, of Los Angeles, is at the head of this business, and is said to be filling orders from all parts of the world.

THE MINNESINGER'S WIFE.

BY THOMPSON FLEMING.

Not only in my lady's eyes
Do I see beauty, but I find
But all the love that poets prize
Is gathered in her hand.

She is the soul of all I sing,
For though to me she belongs
The pipe she plays, the charmed string,
She is herself the song.

There is no wisdom in my word,
The babe of seven times seven,
Nor music in my lay,
Save what I have more sweetly heard
My lady sing or say.

She gazeth at the flower and star,
And reads in their cheeks
A more meaning deeper far
Than any word in book.

I sit on my love's knee and read
The book of seven times seven,
And then some happy word she saith
Outvailed all the rhyme.

She is so true, she is so wise,
She is so pure, she is so kind,
She is so good, she is so true,
She is so all that I can find.

She is the soul of all I sing,
